The book cover features a deep blue background with a fine, woven texture. Scattered across the cover are white line-art sketches of various leaves, including some with serrated edges and others with smooth margins. The title is centered in a large, white, serif font. Below the title, the subtitle is in a smaller, bold, orange sans-serif font. The editor's name is in a white serif font, and the publication date is in a bold, orange sans-serif font at the bottom.

Unwhispered Legacy

An Anthology of Poetry

Edited by Paul Short

Spring 2026

Unwhispered Legacy

Copyright © 2026 The Book Bag X Write Here, Right Now.

Legal Notice: The right of Paul Short to be identified as the editor of this work has been asserted in accordance with the Copyright, Designs and Patents Act 1988. All writers retain the copyright to their own work.

All rights reserved. No part of this anthology may be reproduced in any form without written permission from the editor, except for brief passages in reviews.

Editor: Paul Short

First Edition: March, 2026

Contents

Foreword		6
Scrip	Rishi Dastidar	7
Weather Predictions	Samantha Terrell	8
A Cobweb's View	Jenni Thorne	9
Fetheren	Victoria Spires	10
Call Me By Any Name	Andrew Williamson	11
Threshold	Merril D. Smith	12
My Own Rumpelstiltskin	Sue Finch	13
Train	Paul Connolly	14
Petrichor In Spring	Eleanor Holmes	15
Winter Term at the Glasgow School of Art	Sarah O'Grady	16
Arcade Promise	Sarah Raybould	17
The Lovers (Lifetime Supply of Uni)	Rachel Turney	18
Horseshoe Crab Blood	Özge Lena	19
Just Before	Julian Cason	20
The Wounded Swan	Rhona Greene	21
This Year, The Spider Is Invited	Leia Butler	22
An Englishman on Mount Devas	Ian Tattum	23
Lionheart	Laura Cooney	24
Impaled	Susan Richardson	25
I dreamed of the horse and you again	Robert Galpin	26
Ghost Life	Roger David Smith	27
Almost There...	Helen Laycock	28
Blue	Gill Barr	29
I always knew it would end in falling	Leusa Lloyd	30
No Mirrors in the Forest	Ella B. Winters	31
What Do I Know Of You?	Saraswati Nagpal	32
Still Life With Lovers And Fish	Kate Vanhinsbergh	33
Safe Spaces	Carmella de Keyser	34
Forty	Rebecca Leek	35
Imagine Yourself a Body of Water	Glenn Barker	36
Walking With My Brother on New Year's Day	Chris Campbell	37
I don't know a peony	Vanessa Napolitano	38

Canterbury Beeches	Matt Gilbert	39 american testament	S. Reeson	40
What the yew tree spoke	Sarah Raybould	41
We, the People	Sreelekha Chatterjee	42
In pursuit	Donna Faulkner	43
Whisper	John Adlam	44
Far and away, a chime	Regine Ebner	45
Thread	Anthony J. P.	46
She Purchases A Semi-Precious Gemstone Bracelet	Finn Cassidy	47
A Lost Balloon at Stapleton Road Station	Chris Campbell	48
Stormtrooper	Sandra Beth Levy	49
Recurring Dream	Paul Connolly	50
Slivering the Sky	Susan Richardson	51
Bradley Woods	GP Hyde	52
Sentinel Species	Rachel Burrows	53
1973	Tim Green	54
Sea Cucumber	Carolyn Thomas	55
The Backroom Of My Dreams	Francis H. Powell	56
Hours After Midnight	Matthew M.C. Smith	57
Look at Me	Paul Rapley	58
Seizure Sonata in No Light	Joshua Walker	59
Arctic Sunrise	Laura Cooney	60
Dust Angel	Ellie Rees	61
A Poet Wanders a Garden in Spring	Paul Short	62
Fait accompli	Jenevieve Carlyn	63
Ocean Memory	Eleanor Holmes	64
Stephen	Kate Vanhinsbergh	65
Xylophone	Stephen Paul Wren	66
Ambient Language	Michael DuBon	67
The Stone	John Chmura	68
Tracks of Life	Francesca L. Rolle	69
Fine	Dawn McLachlan	70
Field	GP Hyde	71
un knotted tucked	C. Oulens	72

In the nightclub of my problems	Vanessa Napolitano	73
Retreat	Rhona Greene	74
Words	Francesca L. Rolle	75
The Professor Sighs,	Peter Devonald	76
Train travel as recurrent dream sequence	Victoria Spires	77
The Colour Of Dying	Helen Laycock	78
Dissociation	Matthew M.C. Smith	79
Magi	Leusa Lloyd	80
Fabritius 1654	Saraswati Nagpal	81
Becoming a Galaxy	Özge Lena	82
Woman/Swan	Merril D. Smith	83
We follow the drove roads in late summer	Andrew Williamson	84
Wetland	John Adlam	85
The starlings	Ella B. Winters	86
Returning To Woolacombe With My Now Adult Son	Julian Cason	87
Where have all the blue skies gone	Jenny Robb	88 city eternal	a.d	89
Radix Perrenis	Paul Short	90
Biographies		91

Foreword

The idea of creating an anthology had been on my mind for some time. Over the past few years, I have read more than one hundred collections for The Book Bag, and the experience deepened my appreciation for the power of contemporary poetry. When I floated the idea in the Write Here, Right Now Poetry Writing Group, I knew it was a project I wanted to bring to life.

Like any new editor, I wondered: would poets respond to my call for submissions? As it turned out, I needn't have worried. The poetry community responded generously, providing an excellent range of work and styles including many of the poets who have featured on The Book Bag, as part of The Book Bag: Poetic Voices feature or attended a Book Bag Open Mic. I want to say a huge thank you to everyone who submitted and for trusting me with your words. It is truly a privilege.

For those who are interested in the title, it comes from watching Dead Poet's Society where Robin Williams is explaining you can hear legacies calling out. I used that as a starting point and went with it.

The work in this anthology explores multiple themes including identity, nature, place, love, and grief. The arrangement of the poems is intentionally mixed. Rather than grouping the pieces by theme, I've followed my instincts, allowing poems to shift focuses and perspectives. My hope is that readers will feel surprised and curious about what awaits them on the next page.

Another reason for curating this book was to raise funds for an important charity, Médecins Sans Frontières. If you wish to make an optional donation, please scan the qr code at the bottom of this page.

I hope this anthology brings you happiness, hope and comfort.

Without further ado, let's get to the poems...

Best wishes,

Paul

Scrip

There's no better place than an urgent care centre to centre the universal life force. Or at least demand – hope – expect that it turns up today in full throat, maximum wattage, doesn't decide to phone it in, half-arse it.

It's a comfort to think there's not one god but an infinity of them. So many more places to appeal to, whisper to, cry to, shout at. Why shouldn't a hard grey plastic chair provide comfort and comfort? The gravel on the flat roof? Every pebble a miniature Eir waiting to become protective armour when asked nicely enough. Prayer isn't prescription, but have faith the most unlikely arrangement of atoms might, just might, actually save you.

Rishi Dastidar

Weather Predictions

Who dares put glasses on a rainbow, implying a need to clear-up its gorgeous blurs from one colour to the next?

Or, blinders on a cloud – denying it the opportunity to know its backdrop (sky blue, or slate; perhaps aegean in preparation for a storm)?

I've tried many times to clap for thunder but I'm usually drowned out. Apparently it's modest and doesn't care for the applause.

We could take pity on raindrops or dewdrops – lolling about aimlessly on meadow grass and window glass.

But the drama queens are the wind (there's simply no predicting her), and the sun – when she refuses to shine.

Samantha Terrell

A Cobweb's View

I've spun myself into the hush of your indecision.
Thread by thread,
I've learned the rhythm of your almos.

You see me settled in my corners.
Imagine how I look down on you.
You think, maybe today.
But the duster stays idle,
And I stay whole.

I've become part of the architecture.
Not decoration, not defiance, Just a soft witness to your overwhelm.

I catch the tremble of all you meant to do.
I feel safe while you feel guilt.
We both know this is not about me.

Jenni Thorne

Fetheren

Fetheren. Middle English, meaning ‘to furnish with feathers’

Greet the descent as furtherment to the flight, and you will begin to see it as I see it: an arc of feathers, fingertipping to their farthest reaches, then ellipsing, Daedalus-heavy in freefall. The circle completes, an accidental sundial made of future memories. For now all is suspense, torsion, fluidity. Some combination of the three defines an ambit we are yet to decide. We open our arms skyward. We are ready.

Victoria Spires

Call Me By Any Name

spring sunshine graces your smile through the Grassmarket holding hands birds sing in praise of the saints and you call me by any name that means love

summer heat warms to our communion running fast enough to catch our breath birds fledge their nests left behind you call me softly
by names only we can know autumn comes early rains close around us smoke from cosy hearths fills the air the fieldfares leave for warmer lands you call me in a whispered voice

winter's northerly hints at snow I wrap up against the elements those who remain search for shelter alone in the spaces in between

Andrew Williamson

Threshold

The massive door has always been locked

until now

it stands slightly open like parted lips whispering yes.

You imagine turquoise sky, peach sorbet clouds, non-existent in this grey-world.

You touch the weathered wood dotted with knotted eyes, wonder how far eternity is—how wide? How deep?

But there is the latch, undone, there is the handle,

so, you inhale, exhale, pull—

sea-salt breath brushes your skin as you step over the sill.

No more doors. No more locks.

This is where your life begins.

Merril D. Smith

My Own Rumpelstiltskin

I have coughed you out.

You with your fidgeting twigs of fingers clacking your magnetic stones in my chest.

You black-cloaked, word swallowing
lung-shallower.

I forgive you now for the time you stole, for shadowing me with the thunder of leaving.

I can even thank you for this solstice
as I stand under the rising sun.

I am naming you,
loud and clear,
my own Rumpelstiltskin
to set you free.

Sue Finch

Train

abound in fritters light rebounds eye flick freeze get off around the hand went where it didn't fall it fell so look you can't scy free scy to la ca the rib ca diss this Dis free of it knee

run now scratch my fuh my sides the head my head

what'll it no
it's know a now of past we will shortly be loves are were never-loves

thrusting to the train unclothe in thought here

just get off then hot we are now hot

arriving and be bebebeep soon bag down to shake their heads and drift back in dark dignity and go yet stay here stay and hornet at my face

Paul Connolly

Petrichor In Spring

if I were searching for a sign:

would I have found it on shimmering Myrtle Mountain, written in Saharan dust on windshields in the looping shapes drawn over terracotta rooftops, swifts and swallows racing anticlockwise that day.
or the ringing of Sant Joan's bell, death toll of anticipatory mourning the sudden metallic taste of coffee with milk, wicked cravings for ensaimada, loaded with sugar hills and valleys licked off your fingers.
the absence of blood, the swelling of breasts, sickness and the animal hunger for you.
a window opened, petrichor in spring floods bursting the opal Xúquer river wide open, the knife grinder's whistle, his piercing cry, a fight between sparrow and locust on the wing thin space between solitary and multiple. scars inside barely healed poison in my blood, removed by renal tubules, the liver tender and heart enlarged entrails examined and the sac, the sac.

a human tower toppling, before the child is held aloft.

Eleanor Holmes

Winter Term at the Glasgow School of Art

Later she said, my seipin hair froze...

those curls as brittle as her independence, crackling in the Clydeside air.

I sobbed in the car, handbrake pulled up tight against the ice of Dalhousie St.

All mothering runs to an undersook.

Her dimples swept me almost as far as the Border.

(undersook = an undercurrent flowing in the opposite direction to the surface water)

Sarah O'Grady

Arcade Promise

We juggle children around its neon show, pin ball twenty pence coins, watch them disappear

like magic,

the claw / picks / out
the winners, convinces us to pursue probability, pushes us over the edge like the 2p coins to break dance with a refresher lolly or troll keyring with punk rock hair.

We are dazzled by the trickery of carnival lights, jukebox carousel and the jangle of celebrity / puked / from a Pac-Man mouth, discover we can spin without moving, throw knives without hurting anyone, contort ourselves into a thousand identities behind a joystick or plastic wheel.

The truth / fades / like a vanishing handkerchief, slap-stick pleasure sweet as candyfloss until it melts.

Sarah Raybould

The Lovers (Lifetime Supply of Uni)

In my searching wonder, I almost missed you standing beside the sea.
Your emerald gaze was all I needed to be convinced that I had found my sea anemone treasure of endless uni, so rich and buttery.

Will you fly away with me now? The sky will hold us in our cloud kingdom of water particles and reverie.

Hold me close in the marmalade sunrise. Overturn conch shells, pink like the rays through the slats. Kiss me before the sun finds us.

Rachel Turney

Horseshoe Crab Blood

"I know a lady in Venice would have walked barefoot to Palestine for a touch of his nether lip." Shakespeare, Othello. Act 4 Scene 3.

A plague was approaching like a predator. The midnight you left me wearing your invisible doctor mask to save other lives, I had a dream.

I was a horseshoe crab on a half-ruined bridge in Venice, a faceless crowd was collapsing around me, and I was screaming.

You held me on your palm to kiss my wetness before you carried me through dirty canals to a sterile lab under fluorescent lamps.

You strapped me onto a cold steel stall, pierced the soft tissue of my skin with a needle pushed into my heart.

Then you threaded a catheter, the other end dripping into a glass bottle,

and you harvested my blood.
I watched it pour indigo like the Mediterranean separating us. All night I bled balm for you until a vermilion dawn.

Özge Lena

Just Before

Just before the childhood junction of a father dying, we are found again in his car, returning at night on a fast-flowing M4, traffic's intrusive sweep of curious passing lights seems looking now, a little-understood fiery burial ritual;
the pre-sorrow rain,
a thurible's attempted blessing cast against our cloistering unrepentant windows.

Both cosy and alone
I'm belted in both states though soon to be a slick of separating oil and water;
all on that rear pew,
sat behind my father's front-fixed face, racing the dark,
and I specifically remember his never once turning back.

Julian Cason

The Wounded Swan

The wounded swan
of your unconscious, mute and directionless, floats in an entanglement of umbilicals and entrails – red ribbons on the cusp of a dream of a lake before thought becomes forbidden fruit in the womb of perpetual forgetting.
Feathered enigma, born of a virgin plume, slips like water through the fingers of your mind and bleeds, bleeds, bleeds out into the great abyss. You bind this cold delicateness in satin, silk, lace, lingerie – anything to keep it alive.

Rhona Greene

This Year, The Spider Is Invited

polka-dot-pom-party-hat will not fit on head!

stickytable!stickyglass!sicklycake!stickycocktailstick!
stickybin!stickywall!stickyjamtrappuddles!

who wants to be the thimble and go in my car there are 2 pink plastic pieces and I am trading a career as a race car driver for a veterinarian!

Leia Butler

An Englishman on Mount Devas

Full- blooded poppies, courting a vampire's kiss.

A precipice coloured purple by mountaineering irises, tired of Stanley Spenser's border in Cookham.

Owl flies in their blue cloaks of visibility-as stealthy as their namesakes, and as deadly.

Carpenter bees share a violet and black light and sound show.

Painted ladies drop in from Marrakesh.

Blackbirds are at home in this Addlestrop of juniper and wild thyme.

Ian Tattum

Lionheart

I think you allow yourself to love me in the afternoon.

And late,
in the dark,
when you're alone and your legs hug the outside of the duvet and you nearly invite me in by leaving that x hanging there.

If you could touch just a corner of the fabric of my blanket and feel the greatness of what I think it would feel like to lie in your arms you'd not stop yourself-

You'd love me in gaps too like the teeth of comb you'd stick your tongue through them to feel the rasping friction.

Laura Cooney

Impaled

America rages against itself, stuck under the thumb of a madman, sullied by the stench of hate.
She is a country strangled by chaos, by vines that grow from saplings of fear, slither and suffocate.

The sky splits apart, clamouring with avarice while the roots of compassion are ripped from the earth, brutal hands covered in the sludge of self-interest.

We mourn the loss of dignity, see it buried deep under the detritus of greed, spend weeks in the apartment listening to the world crumble.

We hold our breath until we can run, feel clean air in our lungs, see only green for miles.

Watching from a distance, our eyes are impaled by the horror of men with ruthless fingers eviscerating the heart of America.

Susan Richardson

I dreamed of the horse and you again and we were riding up the valley on our bicycles, stopping, skidding on the gravel—you almost ran to its chestnut glow.

You — in your worn-out shorts and frayed top, boots untied, long hair filtering the sun—reaching for its shining flank, copper face, black mane. And you so poised and pleased as it moved gently, in the heat, under your hand.

And at the top — this part, I think, was real—we lay by the corrugated barn and watched the valley spread—the red-brick terraces, blank white warehouses and heard the clangour of the distant scrapyards.

And in that sound, it became the time we got lost in a narrow field with a nervous, stamping horse, our bikes a muddy hindrance, time running out on a frozen afternoon.

We had gone so far that day but still I was afraid to climb the fence.

You only laughed and said nothing:

then crouched — hands cupped, and braced.

Robert Galpin

Ghost Life

If I were a ghost, I'd haunt you, stick by you like a stalker through this life after life, drift through the misty chill like a snowflake in a cold October wind, hang unyielding on each hot life-breath, this humanity that remains, in the envelope between life and the everlasting nothing.

Roger David Smith

Almost There...

The air is freshly laundered, clouds tumble-dried.

Above a pail of milk, a powder-blue sheet is in full billow.

Silversprigged with birdsong and peppery stamens, the cherry blossom flosses;

shy bluebells dip sky-washed bonnets, and,

timid pilgrims of the dark, snowdrops whisper
their angelic prelude, chorister sleeves tintured in forested cuffs.

Blood-warm as a curled fox, the terracotta is starred with dusky phlox and,

tinted pink in a tulip womb,

a bee

rakes its velvet pile, and baskets pollen,

miles from home.

Helen Laycock

Blue

At nineteen Pablo leaves Spain for Paris with Casagemas. They paint the town rouge, then Casagemas shoots himself, believing he's killed his fickle girl-friend first. Pablo slides into dead-friend's shoes to salve his pain, solve the guilt. He reels into paint, careers into blue, spilling his big loss, seeding his sick fear in stricken, suffocating blues.

He will find that everything changes: blue grief will give way to rouge on the lip and rose on the cheek; even the airless tomb and more sickening horrors will collapse into sharpened form.

Out of composed destruction

he will change everything.

Gill Barr

I always knew it would end in falling still, I caressed those wings, feather-soft and waxy felt the rush of air as he propelled upwards breathless, his form blotted small against sky hot light blinding vision.

In the end, I lost him - but oh, how sweet, to watch him reach for the sun and almost catch it

Leusa Lloyd

No Mirrors in the Forest

The trees don't compare their skin. Here is the giant oak trunk ribboned with stretch marks, here the silver birch, black-blemished and peeling, here the pine, pockmarked where it nurtured woodpeckers.
And here is my body, pocked, and blemished, and stretched.
I compare it every day. Trace with want, condemn each life line in the mirror. I want to splinter my limbs, to count the rings inside me, bury my feet in peat like a cutting, take root, hair curling wild like moss. I want to stretch my arms out, let them sag
with the weight of birds, while spiders weave silk through my armpits.
I want bark beetles to tickle my sides as they bore tunnels into my flesh, make spacious homes from the decay, so finally there is comfort inside my skin.

Ella B. Winters

What Do I Know Of You?

You, who emerged from Time's strange river and worshipped the goddess of lightning in summer's orchard.

Your loss is ancient:
an iron spell wrought in the bones—your desires, molten and honeyed—

you laugh at the abyss where the world trembles between beauty and brutality on cliffs of myth—

where words are arrows exiting your wounds, piercing the shooter and the shot.

Saraswati Nagpal

Still Life With Lovers And Fish

Discs of lemon stacked neatly in a bowl, the heavy slab of the snapper watching from the glass-domed mansion of its eye.

I am told that I can avoid a bland meal with certain preparation — that I must scour the membrane of its minerals, lock the flesh with citrus, release its oils; unhook the tail, peel away the spine.

The shredded zest will lift the taste, the pan of heat softening the cells to infuse the shards of salt with parsley in the keel-broken waters of longing.

You hardly notice the flavour, or the gooseflesh rippling across my skin.

Kate Vanhinsbergh

Safe Spaces

What is a safe space to you?

Is it your mama's garden ripe with jumping beans, radishes and sundried tomatoes?

Is it your child's smile they wear as ivory feathers when they return to greet you?

Is it the book you read by candlelight in the blushing nape of the night?

Is it the wine you wash regret and grief away with, as you bathe in the elderberry twilight?

Is it Billie Holliday on toast?

Is it gazing at Georgia o' Keefe under a cerulean canopy of dust?

Whatever it means to you-

I hope your space feeds you with love.

Carmella de Keyser

Forty

'I'll never be forty,'
Our dad always said,
'If I'm ever forty,
I'll wear pants on my head.'

The number was high,
It was so far away,
As far as the glint
Of the weathervane
On a still cloudless day.

'I'll never be forty,
My beard is all black,
My arms can still spin you To Mars and then bring you, All the way back.'

That number grew closer,
And then thirty-nine,
Stole its path onwards Through snowdrops and tulips, Bluebells and wild celandine.

We wrote out the card,
Our mum iced the cake,
We weren't very certain Our dad was that glad About reaching forty,
But time has no brake.

And look, there's the photo,
He did what he said, When he turned forty,
He wore pants on his head.

Rebecca Leek

Imagine Yourself a Body of Water that you might believe the rain was yours to gain that you could stop the wind and still it for a few moments, and draw a flat calm over your surface, though ripples disturb its peace.

You know it to be impossible yet you know how to dream and draw a vestige of its shape, telling you that all things are possible in this world, though fleeting, and almost always written on your twilight vision in ciphers, like the augury of migrating geese above or the jackdaws nesting in your chimney.

Fame, ubiquity, chance and fate are the teeth of the ratchet, holding you prisoner, tethered by Gordian knots of reality and science, muddying the unblemished stream that runs through your own unfathomable body of water.

Glenn Barker

Walking With My Brother on New Year's Day

Our sons leap through frosted reeds as they attempt to whistle: a wheeze, whoosh, raspberry.

They chase their breath as we did,
jump on firework carcasses, burst into view and out again.

It's not birdsong from the Hawthorn trees that remind us of home but the stretched notes of boyhood.

Chris Campbell

I don't know a peony

From a rhododendron but I can still love the blood-pink punch of it in the garden, its tightly held fist of a bud bursting as if responding to the heatwave or the late evening sun or even a snippet of song from my daughter's bedroom.

I don't know how it has survived my shrugs from the decking, my absent-minded plucking of dandelions, or the rolling field of mint I never hack back, but here we are together again careless, living on our instincts.

We're in it together. I don't know what you call all of these blossoming tough guys, their dresses and bonnets, but I know they hunkered down - survived the hard times - and that they're ready, now, to put on a show.

Vanessa Napolitano

Canterbury Beeches

It was nothing. Nothing but a trick of angles, made that pair appear to tear themselves apart. Of course, those beeches do not stand for us.

Past inosculation exposed as wild mistake. Inexorable uncoupling, conducted at tree speed, with a writhing shrug. These are no sylvan cyphers, impatient to be decoded.

Simply big grey plants, twisting towards light, behind a cathedral garden wall. Old trees don't fall, in or out of love. About that, we can say we're certain.

Here, in this ancient, pilgrim city, famous for its history of bad blood.

Matt Gilbert

american testament

on the First Day the media refused to print the truth preferring instead to cut to lies it had spent months before promoting as many for the first time saw a fight was on the Second Day hate declared a national emergency bigotry became a federal sport there was blaming and much leaving there was mourning and support the Third Day saw an attempt to strip all rights away to replace the accurate with hate but truth endured untouched because it knows kindness matters more than hurt then on Day Four

Difference began to build their signs rallied allies and supporters marked defence in dangerous times determined to overcome in numbers as the Fifth Day came with a certainty of forty days of rain the seas the temperature began to rise big business could no longer look surprised nor escape the blame this new creation myth as yet has no certain end no Day 6 that remains the powerful and many's duty is to fix the sands already running fine for those who thought they were Gods as we wield the power they can't buy sharing hope that we'll never yield

S. Reeson

We, the People

Overwhelming discrimination, credos, politics saturate, society rends itself apart.
Life resembles a hypnotic sleepwalk to the edge, the forever dread of nameless years seems like a biting scourge.
A world indifferent to the striking catastrophes affects, we rise akin to lightning in the dark sky.
When societal sewers are full, clogged, gardens need water, we lash like uninhibited rain.
We are the herd of deer, moving across miles and miles—noiselessly, but really fast as if wildfire.
Our elephantine shadow sweeps, identical to mutiny for parity and justice—our sense of democracy comforts the weep.
United, our rites of natural wizardry eliminate the virus from each infected city.
Our footsteps quiet, shifting at a tranquil pace, awaken the bedight fairness, as each golden tongue reveals that every man is free.

Sreelekha Chatterjee

In pursuit

I chased my tale appearing busy.

I told myself

I was a great hunter, pursuing the day

from dawn until done.

Ignoring skinned knees between long leaps and grand schemes.

I forgot to see all the little things.

I forgot to notice

my cup of tea

forming skin.

Donna Faulkner

Whisper

A cobwebbed whisper of wind wakes and stirs. The breath of the ancient gods is upon me – all at once

I am weeping. The air is thin and lucent

as bees' wings.
I can almost distinguish the aerosol swirl of the disappointed dead – drifting like snow against the sleeping ramparts of this,

our woebegone world.

John Adlam

Far and away, a chime

After the rain,
the desert smelled of licorice and ice.

Birds darted through scented timber, browsing the pious hills and all of nature's promises.

You brought blackbirds and madrigals, stirring,
and just then the hills turned white.
I handed you a star. A fossil and a map.
Every so often, I remember your words, unruly, full of luminance, carillon bells.
Promise me you'll return, with madeleines
and butterflies.

Quiet pools linger in gulches, reflective and trembling with our lust for time, betraying the stormy violets of the rolling dark, and all the hidden miracles.

Regine Ebner

Thread

Each one of us a silken thread woven with complexity.

A delicate weave,
no beginning, no end,
just infinity.

Fragile.
Will it outlast
the raging storm?

The web lives and dies by those links of delicate silken thread.

Anthony J.P.

She Purchases A Semi-Precious Gemstone Bracelet not for her, for her adult daughter, no specific occasion - just desperation - she clutches at opals' cosmic powers.

A mother's love examines every stone, prays it glitters tints of potent gold, a potential gift from apologetic gods.

She holds it aloft to the sacred sun, searches for some scarred secret, willingly follows its pagan whispers.

She gambles faith in glassy glares, dares to dream they'll full-moon glow to absorb a pain's silent screams.

Finally, she forages for flints, hints of hope hidden in each stone's soily imprint, the spot where Mother-Cosmos birthed it.

Finn Cassidy

A Lost Balloon at Stapleton Road Station

My son's balloon slips from his pushchair, floats down the track:

a yellow glint

below winter clouds.
He'd seized it from a kids' rave:

it shone amid glitter canons, glow sticks.

Now his tears
could put out flames.

I picture a train driver catching the prize,

his cab window ablaze.
Passengers cheer.

He takes it home for his grandchild.

When my son asks why it has gone,
I answer.

He stares, knowing another's small hands might hold his light.

Chris Campbell

Stormtrooper

I yearn to be a full burning sunrise, not a pricked runny egg yolk.
A yellow face of glory, not a dandelion soon to become windblown wisps – beautiful but gone in an eyeblink.
I wish to be a stormtrooper who masters tumultuous winds.
Hurricanes visit me regularly.

I do not know the body counts on my flooded lands, the number of trees bent too far who snap. Then comes the sun its glory shines upon the devastation.
Is the blue sky that follows a denial of death – or a new beginning?
Perspective shifts are so beguiling.
They push and pull, exert astonishing inspiration to press on another day –

Sandra Beth Levy

Recurring Dream

The man with the herringbone cap and dirty bristles sparks a tattered rollup, flaring the dark, then strums the match out. Puddles of grey edge and arc across the road whose cobbles slope down to his darkness under the bridge. Dulls of afternoon stretch to where a coal dray shabs its cart up the wet brown stones then away from workshop shanties on the hill to the woods beyond. Her face is cold, but warmth spills round her then darkness. The blade looks pewter with watery glits under the fag-embered face which inspects it. Rubbed clean on his scarf, it waits.

She'd scream but her lungs collapse into the grab.
It comes and feels like a punch.

Paul Connolly

Slivering the Sky

Emptiness cuts so keenly at night, when there is nothing to do but miss the dead, slices of light pushing against the smoky window like fire irons through a cataract.
I look to the moon slivering the sky so delicately, recall the joy that lived in my mother's eyes, blow a wish to the stars.
Maybe tonight I will see her, a bluebird perched on the edges of a dream.
I need to believe
she watches over me, even though I never learned to believe in God.

Susan Richardson

Bradley Woods

I'll wear a shirt of Lincoln green, step out towards the woods near Bradley Cross, embrace the hedge, slink quietly by, ease past Sylvanus, labouring with his boundary stones.

I dodge between the thousand oaks with their thousand years of weathering the hunt of Odo and his train. My feet are sinking, soaking up the blackened waters of rotting leaf litter.

I'll crouch upon a fallen log in the heart of this glade, taste the bitter green sight of the nettle and the friendly dock leaf, wait for a light-winged dryad to flit past.

I slip into the muddy pond, feel the dank cold water creeping up, around my groin, I'm still, imbibing the willow warbler's song, dissolving beneath the oak's far-stretched canopy.

Bradley Woods, in North East Lincolnshire, UK, are recorded in the Domesday Book of 1086

GP Hyde

Sentinel Species

Do they remember the pelagic soup of their youth, before they settled
and secreted walls.
Before stability called them to follow the crowd – and stay put.
Freedom is filtered now through cirri waves, and unseen neighbours who probe, uninvited.

Regret is sessile.
Cemented,
and lacerating.

Rachel Burrows

1973

The thud and the slip of it I remember.
The cool air thickening. The goal growing pale.
Blackening grass exhaled its musky evening perfume as twilight fell. The football softened, glowed with magic. No one had called us 'in'.
Alone, emboldened, exhilarated, we played on.

Tim Green

Sea Cucumber

Seabed Hoover of shallows, dark benthic depths, tentacles wriggle, finger, guide dead coral, detritus towards insatiable mouth.

Sea worm, beche-de-mer, innocuous; significant enough to name a human tongue.*
The herd feeds, oblivious of exploitation, declining numbers sating human tongues.

Quietly they slide across sea floor, eat, recycle nutrients,
help.

Bislama, the official pidgin language of Vanuatu, derives from beche-de-mer, the French name for the sea cucumber.*

Carolyn Thomas

The Backroom Of My Dreams

You might say the spark was slow to ignite, yet it waited there, patient, still bright in the dim backroom of my dreams.

Some move through life with eyes wide shut, never noticing how embers stir awake at the faintest passing breeze.

Sometimes we shape our words only to please
while the mind circles its silent orbit, turning, turning without end.

We can't always pass, through stormy seas but we can still reach that final destination

Francis H. Powell

Hours after Midnight

brailled,
traced, nailed,
by the lover whose fingertips are falling petals.

Matthew M.C. Smith

Look at Me

I'd set my heart on all you loving me so learned the ways to catch your needy eye I've sussed the greedy blatancy of fame and how to blag a freebie with cool cheek I shine and strut with sleek insouciance while flashing charming smiles to devotees I'm setting shame apart for it is just that my smart clique should pleasure out its days since I was yearning for this as a child and mildness never stopped a bee's despatch I shall be earning squillions at this mine as others bend the knee and trudge for miles I shall have been...
What?
Your bad. I was misled. I swear you'd said I had to stitch an epic thread on grammar.

Paul Rapley

Seizure Sonata in No Light

My head is a church bell with no Sunday left in it.
Sometimes I lie still enough to hear the rot behind my eyes, a symphony of gnats tuning the silence.
The nurse with the swallow tattoo asks me to rate my panic on a scale of 1 to 10.
I ask her how she scores the daily collapse of a sun.
Someone honks at a red light.
I scream in Morse code.
She offers me a pill I can't pronounce and a smile I don't believe in.

Joshua Walker

Arctic Sunrise

That's what you called it the colour of his nose in the cold and you made me smile - the way you said it.

The bitter air softened with a rush of laughter on the walk home.

And no-one else heard it but me, and maybe no-one else was meant to.

And later, we couldn't remember.
A kind of beauty forgotten almost as soon as it was spoken.

And then we did.

And then later again, when I was in bed with the soft hall light reflecting on the ceiling, tucked up, I smiled again -
at your unexpected poetry.

Laura Cooney

Dust Angel

It came from nowhere, the creature at my feet skittering around my ankles in the wind.

A wren or a mouse but weirdly transparent, a fallen leaf now turned to lace.

It stopped, though its body still moved, changing shape so alive – yet made of dust.

A clot of spider web, wisps of hair, seed heads – almost spiritual.

A ghost of a creature that doesn't exist, the wind had given it life.

This must be the way new worlds are created.

Ellie Rees

A Poet Wanders a Garden in Spring

After 'Walden' by Henry David Thoreau

I daube my pen with morning mist, caress the page
like an orange-tip over meadow.

Underfoot, wild garlic oils me.
Bluebells and celandine nod from the shade.

I'll save the sun in silk, pocket it gently.

In a hawthorn, a blackbird trills unfussed.

Paul Short

Fait accompli

Yet what if a swift, salutary, reconciling, almost imperceptible action could undo what was done, if it could soothe the sting in merely an instant, could soak up the salt & cauterize the wound, what if this in itself was the salve, was the balm was the wish, was the peace, was the promise of possibility, would you for a moment hesitate to mend a broken wing, a fiercely gentle animal at your feet? What if the storm had simply gone on long enough, if the salt could be transformed, alchemized back to nothing more & nothing less than a prescription for happiness, a saltwater cure, each wave a restoration of the furthest-reaching illuminations of a brilliant, sun-gilded sea?

Fait accompli* - a unilateral action undertaken without consulting those who will be affected by it, leaving others with no choice but to accept it.

Author's note: The world does as it pleases, but we're in conversation with it, and there's agency in that. We don't know what's possible until we try. Go bravely then. Try.

Jenevieve Carlyn

Ocean Memory

Pulse oximetry, tidal luminescence, Da Vinci spoke of this:
the light of youth does not end in stone.

How deep, far back, or in reverse?
Prehistoric or plastic. A virus that's always been here, we surely just forgot.

Is this my hand? That red glow so hard to reproduce, blood carrying oxygen, rendered in pixels and algorithms.

Watch the dancer move their body, all rippling caustic: we ache to swim through pools of sunlight.

Firefly Squid of Honshu die on one night under a full moon. Ocean, lit and teeming, memory full of awe.

Eleanor Holmes

Stephen

i.m. Stephen Vanhinsbergh, 31/03/1955 - 13/08/2012

The man's chest was cracked open with a sound like a great branch breaking.
Inside the ribs, I could see an ocean, and a boat, perfectly formed with its curved sides and fragile rope.

Smaller still, a man in the water.

Even from this height, his hands were perfectly clear. The scene resonating with a sound like glass. It was so quiet — and there, all those he had been, every version of him — contained, as the ribs kept lifting up their hope.

Kate Vanhinsbergh

Xylophone

Some benign kindness gave her a voice.
Drops on a water table. Bubbling earth.
Her distinctive s's.

Her ticks of multiple tongues.
With her ear to rebound. Sharp and brittle.
I do not own many recordings of her.

Sounds that pierce my side.
I long for her clear notes.
I want the shirty shrillness from teenage days.

Her wooden bars and death sit hollow.
Her transparent truth rings.
Locked into a bashful resonator.

I am her father.
Kept by her precise kindness,
I wait in the company of percussion dreams.

Stephen Paul Wren

Ambient Language

Such a lovely whisper, breathy, hot, vowels expanding with the flash spark of lingual friction, a magnesium of the tongue igniting against teeth to fill the cold sonic voids of my west coast Sound:
ten becoming tea-yen, kiyute refusing to be merely cute, elongating our adoration on a whim of comfort, some deep safety, in the the language of a sanctuary somewhere between West and Midwest, we scaling the Sierra Nevadas and the Rockies full of many feline selves, to the Ambient Universe.
All the while my voice sang when I spoke,
The Guatemalan lilt of my heritage intermingled with your homegrown diphthongs and tryphthongs, creating some linguistic line, a tether of len-gu-a y amor, amor, amor una canción de la historia del universo.
I remember I coughed, choking on my own spit at a moment so intimate that our plasma laughter filled the room, a wildfire of delight and dereliction, each atom of the kinetic pressed up against the barriers of the potential, the possible, the song of us together breaking beyond our bedroom walls, soaring above the skyline and above all the dead, gliding upon purple green licks of flame on feathered ambient wings above.

Michael DuBon

The Stone

Your Mama doesn't come much anymore.
Haven't seen her yet this year, me and the cement bunny hiding in the border with the purple pansies fighting for sunlight under the spreading sheath of weeds and crabgrass.
It's time, that's all, not you or me, or the shred of grief left intact that binds us ever stronger to this earth.

It feels good to have hands laid on again, and the warming sun.
An unfamiliar gentleman circles the grounds searching for me and for your name, which isn't easy to find under cover.
Why he was absent these thirty years I don't know, but he must have loved you, no?
To pull the weeds, to set the rabbit straight, to claw dirt from the letter grooves and water your grave with his tears.

John Chmura

Tracks of Life

I waited at one station While you departed at another There was a possibility that Our journeys would intersect But as I stepped onto my train Yours pulled into the platform That my back was facing You watched me leave
As I wondered if we'd ever meet.

Our timetables never did align.

Francesca L. Rolle

Fine

She said it again
But with use it grew more fragile A tiny word once cherished like a jewel Eroded to the merest suggestion Of the brilliance it once held And in the days and years that followed She knew
In the fading of the light That cracked gem carried hope Concealed the mask she wore well But behind the layers and the lacquer Grief left its obvious marks Memories caught in salted tracks And in the plastered over cracks Where only she could see them Still, each time they asked
She said it again

Dawn Mclachlan

Field

I set out, again, to walk the field, follow the roughshod path with metalled boots.
The old tree trunk's still there, shoved to the side, white as sepulchred bones, drenched with rain that's stripped its bark away.

I clatter on, past that black heap, furnace-scraped, farmer-dumped, placed for ploughing in.

I'll be that trunk, that heap of soot so you can burn my bones, plough me in so I'll spring up with newfound friends.

GP Hyde

un | knotted || tucked

this love has no twists / other than one \ you can make / such as that one time \ when a breakaway petrichor from a virga / splurged our way \ or that hot summer day when it hailed / and laid \ a lunar-toned tapestry of rounded unflavoured popsicles / on my chartreuse and your verdant \ terraces or that bronze-sheafed / fall twilight \ when you waited / for the one you invited // to be dashed away... and yet

this poem | finds | you had me stayed || nestled like a gold leaf | dashed in-between || the folds of vellum sheets | of your love | ly invite... anyway...

C. Oulens

In the nightclub of my problems

In the nightclub of my problems you carry glow bands in your slim white hands.
Music shrieks through fuzzy mouths all the dancers say let me out. Let me out!
On podiums the pressing issues writhe against their cages. Temporary containment.
The bass line rages;
the floorlight projects mazes.
Like in a dream of clothesless shame, I'm shock-stopped and drinking shots of river water to help me forget.

Won't you join me- or send a ladder so I can climb from this grim basement?
A stamp on the hand admits re-entry.

Vanessa Napolitano

Retreat

The quiet shining sea slips away from the sand — a glittering retreat into bewilderment.

Rhona Greene

Words

I want to reach up into my brain with a hook and drag it out like a tapeworm of words spilling out of my mouth along my tongue to reveal how I feel, what I think, who I am. But it's firmly rooted, teeth dug in fast to my limbic system sucking it all up and digesting it into unrecognisable puzzle pieces to be re-jigged back together.

Francesca L. Rolle

The Professor Sighs,

we carve out our history into the cold grey earth, we leave insidious marks any way we can,

we are other people's memories, falling on our sword, we are the texture of clouds, transient and ephemeral;

even when I'm not thinking, I think of you, I sometimes wonder if it's all a collective dream, if I ever forget about you, will you cease to be?

If you ever forget about me, who's dream will we be?

Everything has changed but nothing has,
we carve our initials in a heart on an old oak tree, today an exhibition opens that will change our lives, tomorrow another season splinters on another earth, soon our history is carved eloquently on the skies, soon snow is falling over forests, parks and graves.

Peter Devonald

Train travel as recurrent dream sequence

There is always a moment when you come to, find the seam of lucidity at the horizon.

This song cycle of fields; this muted blue that carries within it its own lullabies.

And you – the reluctant somnambulist whose own reflection you briefly see through.

Victoria Spires

The Colour Of Dying

Vultures hunch on bone-trees, watching a string of cotton-mouthed human beads stumble, yellow-footed,
across the waterless earth.

An ever-fraying ribbon, perforated and patched by broken rainbows, they wind

through the rib-lined riverbed where curling fish with tarnished sequins once waned like dropped moons then disappeared.

Long dead.
The raptors circle as mothers squat like burnt crops in orange dust, their barren-bellied babies as rutted as ploughed troughs,

yet hope is still a greentipped shoot; it pushes between the brown husks which litter their journey like sacks.

They trudge on, without choice, carrying wrapped bundles — cocooned little bodies, arrowed silver by the sun, gritty eyes scouring the plain, waiting for the earth to darken.

Helen Laycock

Dissociation

I see that window, its sill with dry sticks in a vase between hot glass and curtain.
I swear to god, I could kiss crisp petals back to life but, this time, remain in myself.
This has taken too long. I could conjure rules for the not yet fake game we walked through, a game well-rehearsed by other downcast actors on shabby-chic streets, holding on to identities unconsciously in the sun's glare.

What I thought it was, what it could be—crisp-brown and vintage. Not yet breaking or burning our shoes.

Matthew M.C. Smith

Magi

Star-bound, we followed, coaxed camels as far as we could,
supped on stale bread, our faces weathered

by devouring rain and ravenous sun, for many miles we trod, trekked slopes with panted breath, submitting to unending blackness.

The last night was longest.
Clouded, our star was the only one shining, its light snuffed to a pinhead, then vanished.

We wandered, directionless, the pale hands of exhaustion tugging at our knees, we bowed our heads like snowdrops - all lost.

There, we would have stayed, had it not been for the streaking of nectarine through purple, the burning of rowanberry red and blush of rose, the rioting of birdsong and wash of light kissing our foreheads:

oh, how we wept
when dawn bloomed.

Leusa Lloyd

Fabritius 1654

after 'The Goldfinch', oil on panel

From its weathered, grey perch, the goldfinch of my heart has searched for spring in a colourless world.

What use are wings
if the sky is an untasted painting?

These chains of duty are begging to be broken.
Somewhere, my shadow rises like a falcon in the desert, a dream unfettered.

I feel its breath on my neck.

Saraswati Nagpal

Becoming a Galaxy

Whenever the night sky thunders, a matchstick enters the poem, its blaze is nothing within the wind of daily life, but within the hot passion of benzene, it's the end of your tamed tears in the stables. A silver horse trots into the poem, to spirit you away from the flames of the groom approaching to cut your writing hand.

The horse takes you into the darkness of the woods, where you find a newborn foal dying to gallop on four legs. A horseshoe constellation glistens in the poem now, with which you adorn the scars on your fingers right before you abandon the poem to give birth to a new poem about becoming a galaxy of words.

Özge Lena

Woman/Swan

If this thing thrusting-beaked

could would listen

stop--

feathers do not disguise, nor wingbeats enfold, but crush smothering raw screams,

and the aching cry of moon-birds circling

the broken (that may yet be healed)

and you—blooded, bruised

pinioned, tide-synchronized, adrift

in the sough of ghost-whispers

you are not to blame, you have survived.

Merril D. Smith

We follow the drove roads in late summer when night finally comes and the moon is new starlight and satellites hang like chandeliers above us and already what we see is history

the sky dances a reel we know so well and your eyes your eyes as bright as any star as you trace the old drove roads

where shooting stars follow the paths our ancestors walked across the heavens crossing stone and stardust them and us

we lie on our backs in the heather you take my hand beside the old shieling in the briefest night and the world is fine

Andrew Williamson

Wetland

Dry is but the domain of distant memory. One worn woollen walking sock squelches, then subsides. An easterly wind scowls under nimbus eyebrows, throws us a look to chill us in our puddled footsteps as we crest the floodwall.

The sulphurous sea froths, disgorging its spumous wrath against the dunes and groynes, souring the sloughs

with its saltwater scorn.
Don't you see?
We are wretched now and displaced – strangers still.

Didn't we delve, divert, develop – drive like the very Devil?

We could not be content with our blessings. Now grace is slipping away from us like sand from collapsing coastlines, rainwater rilling through faintly reaching fingers.

John Adlam

The starlings

come and go as they please. Each year clumping a murmuration, magnetic wings pulling North and South.

They know nothing of safe and legal routes, only the softness of a sprawling sky, the candour of water, each other's fragile bodies an armour.

Ella B. Winters

Returning To Woolacombe With My Now Adult Son

Late dusk clouds
slink low as factory fumes, we walk over the soft edge of a genuflecting surf and oblivious to its politely left ribboned calling-cards.
Sky punches with the heft of fresh stars and stupored, we both conspire to upend Time:
not really knowing where or when we are.

Behind us,
on the quivering hill houses glint, freshly netted.

Julian Cason

Where have all the blue skies gone

There's a terrible river scouring the town. The water is unknowable, frothing and brown as if a million cappuccinos escaped from cafés lining the streets.

Cameras pan to a mangled wreck of cars. I hug a cushion for comfort, think of the couple here who drowned driving under a bridge in a flooded street nearby. But Valencia is something else; my mind grapples with what lies beneath.

Jenny Robb

city eternal

We traverse the plain where masses came to be serenaded by death, now silent & deserted; in time all blood spilled is reclaimed by dust. Past the church where a stone mask fatally measures the weight of your sobriety. Up the sacred pathway, beneath other men's gruesome victories. You take a photo of me within an arc, loosing your arm at mid-exposure. I look as insubstantial as a spoil, pallid & faceless. In a sunless alley your gloved hand across my mouth, our rites of sex & perforation. We visit the effaced artist & his remaining chamber of thresholds that disclose nothing. Ghosts glimmer within each crack, if you know how to spy them.

Look— the transition from human to divine is as simple as stepping from night into aureate light.

a.d.

Radix Perrenis

Create forests for wandering, for wondering,
for healing,
not for wood carved into coffins.

Drop seeds, not bombs, allow rivers of blossom and emerald to flow rather than artillery grey rubbledust of death.

In long troughs plant bulbs—hyacinth, crocus, snowdrop, tulip, rather than fallen lives.

Melt rocket casings, bullet casings, mortar casings, alchemise destruction to repair.
Build / build / build.

Create forests.

Drop seeds.

Plant bulbs.

Repair.

Rebuild.

Finally, frame an atlas where everybody belongs.

Paul Short

Biographies

Risbi Dastidar's fourth collection of poetry is Cherry Blossom at Nightbreak (Nine Arches Press, 2026). His third collection, Neptune's Projects (Nine Arches Press, 2023), was longlisted for the Laurel Prize, and a poem from it was included in The Forward Book of Poetry 2024. He is chair of Wasafiri, the magazine of international contemporary writing, and a trustee of the Wordsworth Trust.

Samantha Terrell is the editor of SHINE international poetry series. Her collections have been published by indie presses throughout the US & UK, and her work has been widely anthologized, recently in haus-a-rest, iamb poetry, Torch & Tinder, and others. Terrell and her family reside in Upstate New York.

Jenni Thorne is a poet from the Black Country. She loves to explore the space between how life appears and how it is felt, and the contradictions we all carry. She shares her writing and thoughts on Bluesky @jenthorne.bskey.social.

Victoria Spire's work has been widely published. In 2025 she came Third in the Rialto Nature & Place competition and won the Alpine Fellowship Poetry Prize, and she was recently a finalist in the Mslexia Women's Poetry competition 2026.

Andrew Williamson is a writer and poet. From Aotearoa New Zealand, he now lives in the Isle of Skye. He has written three collections of poetry and a novel. His poems have been published widely in Aotearoa, the US and UK.

Merril D. Smith is a Pushcart and Best of the Net nominated poet. Her full-length poetry collection, River Ghosts (Nightingale & Sparrow Press) was Black Bough Poetry's December 2022 Book of the Month. Her new collection is Held Inside the Folds of Time (Jane's Studio Press, 2025).

Sue Finch is the author of Magnifying Glass, Welcome to the Museum of a Life, and Vortex Over Wave. She loves the coast, peculiar things, and the scent of ice-cream freezers.

Paul Connolly's poems have appeared in many magazines including Agenda, Poetry Salzburg, Stand, Manchester Review, Chiron, Scintilla, and takahē. Third place in the Magna Carta competition, he was shortlisted for the Bridport and Charles Causley prizes and has Forward Prize and Best of the Net nominations for 2026.

Sarah O'Grady's work appears in various small press including Butcher's Dog, The Madrigal, Black Bough & Broken Spine. A pamphlet was short-listed by Black Bough in 2024 and another shortlisted by Hedgehog Press 2025. Winner Winged Moon Competition 2025, Short-listed Ironbridge Competition 2025.

Sarah Raybould is a poet from the Peak District. She has written and performed a commission for English Touring Opera, has various recent and upcoming publications with Black Bough, After..., The Page Gallery, The Fig Tree, and was featured in the National Poetry Library showcase in November 2025.

Rachel Turney, Ed.D. (she/her) is an educator and artist located in Denver. Her poems, research articles, reviews, and drawings can be found in a variety of publications. Rachel is passionate about immigrant rights, teacher support, and empowering other artists. She is a Writers' Hour prize winner and Best of the Net nominee. Her photography appears on a few magazine covers. Rachel runs the popular online reading series Poetry (in Brief). She is on staff at Bare Back Magazine with her monthly column Friday Night in the Suburbs. She reads for The Los Angeles Review. Website: turneytalks.com Instagram: @turneytalks Bluesky: rachelturney Özge Lena is an internationally published poet. She recently presented her poetic approach "Catapoetics" at the International Conference on Poetry Studies, University of London. Her work has received Pushcart Prize and BOTN nominations and been shortlisted for the Oxford Brookes International Poetry Competition, The Plough Poetry Prize, and other awards.

Julian Cason lives in Cardiff. Nominated for a Forward Prize, Two Pushcart Awards and Best Of The Net (Twice). Publications include Black Bough (Silver Branch Poet), East Ridge Review (Featured Poet), Winged Moon, Frogmore Papers, Dreich, Dream Catcher. Contributing poet to multiple anthologies. Found on X @hool415 and BlueSky @hool415.bskey.social.

Rhona Greene is an award-nominated Dublin writer who recently guest sub-edited The Storms Journal V. Publications include Black Bough Poetry's Silver Branch series and iamb.uk wave nineteen. Find Rhona on X/Instagram: rhona_greene or Bluesky @rbonagreene.bskey.social.

Leia Butler is the editor of Full House Literary. Her poetry can be found in Streetcake Magazine, Acropolis Journal, Roi Fainéant Press, Permeable Barrier, Atrium, Aswirl, and Fawn Press. She has poetry collections published with Broken Sleep Books and Stanchion. Her latest poetry collection was published by Steel Incisors in March 2025.

Ian Tattum retired and lives on the Isle of Purbeck. His poems have been published by Black Bough Poetry, Spelt and Starbeck Orion, and his essays by Landlines for Nature, The Clearing, and the Church Times. He is a Fellow of the Linnean Society.

Laura Cooney is a writer from Edinburgh with a chapbook Motherbunnet, out now. Nominated for a BOTN award in 2024 and 2025 she is the co-EIC of Frazzled Lit, when not writing she'll be with her daughters, as close to the sea as possible. There will be ice-cream!

Susan Richardson is the author of three collections of poetry and has had work published in numerous journals and anthologies. She also hosts the literary podcasts, A Thousand Shades of Green and Story Sessions, and writes the blog, Stories from the Edge of Blindness.

Rob Galpin works in nature restoration and lives and gardens in Wallsend, North Tyneside. He has not previously been published.

Roger David Smith is originally from Caithness, in the far north of Scotland, but currently lives in the south of France, where he works as a teacher. He has had poems and short stories featured in various literary magazines and websites including Cutting Teeth, Prosetrics, Nerve, Nomad, The Starbeck Orion, The Candyman's Trumpet, Fevers of the Mind, Minted, Haus-A-Rest, Suburban Witchcraft, Urban75 and others.

Helen Laycock, winner of Black Bough Poetry's Chapbook contest and shortlisted of The Broken Spine's Chapbook competition, has nominations for the Pushcart Prize and Best of the Net. Widely published, she has recently been showcased at iamb and celebrated in a 'Silver Branch' feature with Black Bough.

Gill Barr's debut collection A Wide River Divides Us was published by Cinnamon Press in 2025. Her poetry film of the same name was short-listed for Cork's Obbeal International Poetry Film Competition and selected for screening at the Vienna International Festival in April 2026. Gill holds an MA in Creative Writing from Queen's University and has received an award for her poetry from the Arts Council of Northern Ireland.

Lensa Lloyd's poetry and short stories have been published in Propel Magazine, Ink Sweat & Tears, Bracken, Anthropocene, Green Ink Poetry, Moon Water, Tiny Wren Lit, Black Bough Poetry, Wee Sparrow Press and more. Follow her on X: @lloydensa and Instagram: @lensalloyd

Ella B. Winters (she/they) is a social worker, researcher, and writer, living on the South-East coast of England. Her poetry often explores themes of identity, memory and belonging, has been nominated for the Forward prize and is twice nominated for the Pushcart prize. She is an associate editor at Shadow & Sax. Instagram: @ella.b.winters Saraswati Nagpal is a Forward Prize-nominated Indian poet, writer of myth & fantasy, and classical dancer. She is Co-Editor at The Winged Moon literary Substack, and is published in The Atlantic, Atlanta Review, Acropolis, Dust, S.A.N.D., and others, besides international anthologies. She has been nominated for four Best of the Net and a Pushcart Prize for her poems. Her debut poetry collection is Drench Me in Silver (Black Bough, 2025).

Kate Vanhinsbergh is a poet from Manchester, UK. She has poems published or forthcoming in Iamb, Black Bough, Ink Sweat & Tears, Anomaly, We Hyperfocus, After... and others. She holds a Masters in Creative Writing from Keele University and can be found on Instagram @kate.vanhinsbergh or X @katenanbergh.

Carmella de Keyser is a prize-winning British poet, known for explorations of identity, and the liminal spaces of human experience. Founder of the Harlow Circle of Poetry Stanzas, judge for the Harlow Poetry Open, she has two published chapbooks and two forthcoming, from Hedgehog Press, Alien Buddha Press and Parlyaree Press.

Rebecca Leek is an author, musician, and prize-winning poet. She produces the poetry podcast, The Ditty Bag, and performs regularly in the East of England.

Glenn Barker is a South Yorkshire poet and reviewer, drawn to capturing the discordant spirit of our existence, landscape and morality. He writes in a rich and immersive imagery, a dance of language on our interpretations of reality, the ambiguities of the human condition, and the dynamics of contemporary life.

Chris Campbell lives in Oxford. His second full collection, 'Why I Wear My Past to Work', is published by Parlyaree Press (2025). His mini-pamphlet is due in 2026 (Atomic Bohemian). His poems appear in The Rialto, Magma, Prole. Chris was Highly Commended in the 2024 Cobb International Poetry Competition.

Vanessa Napolitano is a Word Up North New Northern Poet 2025. She has published three pamphlets including 'Various Magics'. Her work can be found in Interpreter's House, Clarion, and Stanchion. She writes on themes of grief, nature and everyday magic.

Matt Gilbert is from Bristol, but currently gets his fill of urban hills in South East London. His work has appeared in various publications, including recently: Abridged, Full House Literary, The Madrid Review and The Rialto. His debut collection 'Street Sailing' came out with Black Bough Poetry in 2023.

S Reeson [she/they] is a bisexual, multidisciplinary artist and mentor, published by The Poetry Society and Bloomsbury/OneWorld, with work in nearly 30 independent literary magazines and anthologies since 2018 (most recently Ink, Sweat and Tears), plus a pamphlet debut, 'Flammable Solid' in 2022.

Sreelekha Chatterjee is a poet from New Delhi, India. Widely published in more than forty journals, magazines, and anthologies globally across twelve countries, her poems have appeared in Madras Courier, Setu, Verse-Virtual, Timber Ghost Press, Oreanaug Mountain Poetry Journal, The Wise Owl, Ghudsavar Literary Magazine, Black Bough Poetry, among others. Facebook: facebook.com/sreelekha.chatterjee.1/, X (formerly Twitter): @sreelekha001, Instagram @sreelekha2023, Bluesky: @sreelekha2024

Donna Faulkner is Free-spirited and unconventional, she came to the business of writing later in life. She lives in Rangiora, New Zealand. Her work has been published in The Bayon Review, 300 Days of Sun, Tukabē: Hua/Manu, Tarot Poetry NZ, Windward Review, Havik, New Myths, and others. Her first poetry collection, 'In Silver Majesty', was published by erbacce press, UK, 2024. <https://www.erbacce-press.co.uk/donna-faulkner> Instagram: @lady_lilith_poet X@nee_miller. Website: <https://linktr.ee/donnafaulkner>

John Adlam lives in Brixton, South London. He is Trustee of the Survivors' Poetry collective and member of the Hill Poets Stanzas of the Poetry Society. His poems have been/will be published in Iamb (Wave 27), After..., Madrid Review, Full House Literary, Snow lit rev, Atrium, South, Asylum, and The Broken Spine.

Regine Ebner is a teacher and poet from Tucson, Arizona. Her debut full poetry collection, Mountains that See in the Dark, was published by Black Bough Poems in 2025. Her pamphlet, Oxidized Pennies, was published by Alien Buddha Press (2022). The unique Sonoran Desert is often her muse.

Anthony J Parker is a working-class writer and teacher from Manchester. Since 2010, he has shared writing online and self-published books including 'Finding Hope in the Beehive' to raise money for Mind and Mustard Tree. His interests include travel, history and science fiction. Twitter/X - @antJP01 Instagram - @ant_the_poetic_prince

Finn Cassidy (he/him/his) is an Irish poet, living in the French-Alps. His poems have featured in a variety of international poetry journals and anthologies. He is currently completing his first full poetry collection: Notions of Starkology-Codology. For all things poetry-related, you can contact Finn at fcassidy@email.com and on X @FinianCassidy

Sandra Beth Levy is a retired psychologist who passionately practiced the healing art of psychotherapy for over forty years and is now pursuing immersion in creative writing. She has published widely in numerous USA and international literary journals and anthologies. Her debut chapbook is scheduled for pre-sale with Finishing Line Press fall 2026.

GP Hyde was born on Merseyside and now lives in Grimsby. He studied art at Goldsmith's and at the Royal Academy Schools. His fiction has been extensively published by Pure Slush. His poetry has been published by Broken Spine, Black Bough, Hedgehog, Underbelly, Written Off, the Dark Poets and voidspacezine.

Rachel Burrows' writing features in Northern Gravy, Motherhood Uncensored, Tiny Wren, Write Out Loud's Echoes, The Dawntreader, The Candyman's Trumpet, Underbelly Press, Dust, BBC Upload and upcoming anthologies from The Broken Spine and Hedgehog Presses. She has been nominated for The Pushcart and Best Small Fictions Prize.

Tim Green is a London-based teacher and writer who has loved all things literary from an early age. His prose work appears in Frazzled Lit, Issue 4, and he's a regular contributor of poetry to Top Tweet Tuesday as @teemgrin.

Carolyn Thomas is from the Neath Valley in South Wales but now lives on Tyneside with a misanthropic cat. Her poetry has been published by Anthropocene, Black Bough, Dreich, Red Poets, The Candyman's Trumpet, The Ekphrastic Review, These Pages Sing, Yaffle, Molecules Unlimited, and Fragmented Voices. Carolyn has also featured on The Broken Spine's Podcast.

Born in 1961, in Reading, Francis H Powell currently lives in Moret sur Loing, France writing both prose and poetry. He's had four books published as well as poems published in anthologies, for both adults and children. He's done poetry readings for Paris Lit up as well as other events.

Matthew M. C. Smith is a Welsh writer who is Forward Prize, Pushcart and Best of the Net nominated. He won the RS Thomas poetry prize at Gŵyl Cybi in 2018. Matthew is the author of The Keeper of Aeons and 'Paviland: Ice and Fire'. He edits Black Bough poetry.

Paul Rapley's recent verse has been published by Blue Unicorn, The Broken Spine, Felix, and in his radical novel, My Glorious Journey by Mithridates the Magnificent. He's written guides to Jane Eyre and attacked Much Ado's Don Pedro & Count Claudio. Of late, Paul's been hanging his hat not far from the River Thames. Website: mygloriousjourney.co.uk Joshua Walker is a poet and writer whose work has appeared in Potomac Review, Southern Florida Poetry Journal, and Solarpunk Magazine. He is a Pushcart Prize nominee and Best Microfiction nominee, exploring raw human emotion, memory, and the tension between darkness and vulnerability.

Ellie Rees is an award-winning writer who writes across many genres including poetry, creative nonfiction and memoir. Her work is widely published in various journals. Ellie won the Broken Spine's inaugural Chapbook Competition in 2023 with her second collection, Modest Raptures. Ellie's work appears regularly online for Top Tweet Tuesday and she is a Pushcart Prize nominated poet (twice). She has a PhD in Creative Writing from Swansea University.

Jenevieve Carlyn lives in New England, where a river meets the sea. Her poems have recently appeared in Black Bough Poetry's winter anthology, The Broken Spine's Rites & Trials anthology, The Madrid Review, Humana Obscura, and The Nutmeg Anthology of Connecticut Poems. Look for her on Bluesky & Substack @coastalpoet.

Stephen Paul Wren is a chemist-poet and poet-chemist who has had several books of poems published. His work has also appeared in places such as Tears in the Fence, 14 magazine, and Obsessed with Pipework. Stephen is the founder of the poetry collective called Molecules Unlimited.

Michael DuBon is a first-generation US citizen of Guatemalan descent. His poetry has appeared in The Meadow, The Museum of Americana, Shine Poetry Quarterly, and others, and his creative nonfiction has appeared in The Plentitudes, Heartwood, and Under the Gum Tree. He is an English Professor at Everett Community College.

John Chmura lives and writes in the Pine Barrens of Ocean County, New Jersey, USA. John performs regularly at The Last Stand Open Mic in Tuckerton Seaport and other venues in southern New Jersey. John's poetry and haiku have recently been selected by The Winged Moon, Soup Can Magazine, Trash Panda, Presence Haiku Journal, and The Solitary Daisy.

Francesca L Rolle is a poet living in Clevedon, UK. Francesca grew up in London before studying Human Geography at Sheffield University. With a lifelong interest in poetry and reading she likes to explore how life's experiences weave into her words on the page.

Dawn McLachlan is based in rural Scotland and writes poetry for both adults and children. Dawn's poetry appears in the anthologies, Gods and Monsters, Heroes and Villains - (illustrated by Chris Riddell), Cosy Poems, and Space – A Royal Observatory Greenwich Poetry Book. All published by Macmillan. She is the lead judge of the Brian Nisbet Poetry award.

C. Oulens is an emerging poet. Winner of "Poe-It Like Poe 2025" poetry contest, her works are published in The Broken Spine, The Starbeck Orion, The Candyman's Trumpet, Pan Haiku Review, Poetry Pea, etc. Her poetry engages with radical questions on individual and society, suffused with sentience, wit and satire.

Peter Devonald is a Forward Prize, Pushcart Prize, twice BotN and Children's Bafta nominee, winner Broken Spine Readers' Choice Award 2025, Loft Books Best Poem 2024, Waltham Forest, FofHCS, two HoH's, runner-up Shelley Memorial and N2tS 2024, highly commended Bermondsey and Beyond, Poetry Café, Hippocrates and Passionfruit Review. Peter is widely-published/ anthologised. <https://linktr.ee/pdevonald>

*Jenny Robb was a social worker and then manager in both children's and mental health services. Since retirement she's been published widely in magazines and anthologies. She has two poetry collections published by Yaffle Press, The Doll's Hospital, (2022), and Hear the World Explode, (2024). She lives in Liverpool.*

a.d. is drawn to the sacred, the profane, the mysterious and the mythological, which provides inspiration for her work. She is an award-nominated poet, writer and visual artist, and her work is published in HAD, Hominum Journal, the engine(idling, Audi Locus, Bleating Thing, and elsewhere. Tumblr & Twitter: @godstained

Paul Short is a Forward prize, Best of the Net and multiple Pushcart-nominated poet from Newcastle upon Tyne. He has been widely published, with work featuring on BBC Upload, Eat The Storms and A Thousand Shades of Green Podcast and in publications from Full House Literary, Black Bough Poetry, The Winged Moon, Dust Poetry, Hedgehog Poetry, Broken Spine Arts, Dark Poets Club, The Starbeck Orion and more. He is editor of The Book Bag and Open Mic host. He also facilitates the Write Here, Right Now Poetry Group.